Eleventh Hour Art presents The Collection, a group show featuring the best work from their resident and guest artists that brings together a vibrant showcase of color, shape, form, and community.

Eleventh Hour Art began two years with two artists in a shared studio space in DUMBO. When they serendipitously began to collide with other artists, something magical clicked and they grew into a working gallery. Since paint-splattered floors turned to sunlit gallery walls, Eleventh Hour Art has worked with nine resident artists and fourteen guest artists, presenting seven exhibitions in their newly renovated ground floor gallery and studio space in Brooklyn Heights.

The Collection features the best works from their artists, all created in the past two years specifically for Eleventh Hour Art. The poster is an image of the wall of Polaroids that founder Lindsey Acree keeps and continues to add to, humorously honored on the gallery bathroom wall. The photos capture each artist that has shown work, friends and family at openings, the two-man construction crew that fixes every leaky pipe, the beloved woman who helps clean, collectors standing proudly with their acquisitions, moms, brothers, lovers, and friends. Like the wall of Polaroids, the exhibition's selected works capture snapshots of vibrant emotions. Each artist's distinct style emanates into the space with bold color, shape, form, and emotional impact that combines to form a beautiful whole; each work bringing out the best in the work it hangs alongside. As you walk through the gallery, the intertextuality of each piece shines through to make you laugh, reminisce, and wonder. But most of all, it beckons you to linger, and to become a part of the Eleventh Hour Art family.

After only two years in existence, The Collection cements Eleventh Hour Art as a central creative force in New York, bringing together a growing family of emerging artists and diverse art lovers. Come celebrate the opening of Eleventh Hour Art's group show on Saturday, December 16th from 6–9pm, and you might just get your own Polaroid on the bathroom wall.

Artists: Aleah Leary, Alejandro Portela, Andrew George, Carter Shocket, Ginger Snow, Lindsey Acree, Sophie Haulman, Yung-wu, and Yusuke Okada
